A young Prince, his mother and a Sorcerer are walking deep into the woods when they come across a lake where there are a group of swans swimming.

One swan comes ashore and steals the Sorcerer's magic wand, turning him into a swan, and sends him out onto the lake. Next, the Swan turns the mother into a swan and sends her out onto the lake as well. Then, the Swan turns to the Prince, but before she can wave her wand, the prince steals it and begins poking holes in himself with it.

The Swan asks, 'but Prince, why are you poking holes in yourself like that?'

The Prince responds, I can't float if I've got holes in me, so no one's gonna make a swan out of me.

A young Prince is walking into the woods with a bunch of horny girls they happen upon a sorcerer who out of jealousy and spite, turns them all into swans. They wander the woods for 30 days searching for their parents.

A bird of prey flies by and attacks the helpless swans and their innocent, sexually frustrated blood has formed a lake.

Sorcery is an imaginable correlate of any adversarial relationship.

Curses befall persons who deny food to others.

Someone is attacking the birds in there dreams.

“Nooo!” Helena woke up screaming and lined up against the post of the bed she was sleeping in.

Helena was sweating all over, and her shirt was soaking wet.

It was only a dream.

Helena splashed water on her face.

I felt so real.

Adults began going to psychologists who introduced them to occult practices of the mind, such as guided imagery, “positive thinking” and connecting with the spirit world. Christians began to learn esoteric techniques in church services – praying to Mother Earth, (a deity named “Gaia”), laying hands on the body’s Satanic chakra points, and other pagan rituals.

Six brothers from a King's first marriage have been turned into swans by their hateful stepmother (a beautiful but evil daughter of a witch). The brothers can only take their human forms for fifteen minutes every evening. In order to free them, their sister must make six shirts out of starwort for her brothers, and neither speak nor laugh for six years. The King of another country finds her doing this, is taken by her beauty and marries her. When the Queen has given birth to their first child, the King's own wicked mother takes away the child and accuses the Queen, and again with the second and the third.

The third time, the Queen is sentenced to be burned at the stake. On the day of her execution, she has all but finished making the shirts for her brothers; only the last shirt misses a left arm. When she is brought to the stake she takes the shirts with her, and when she is about to be burned, the six years expire and six swans come flying through the air. She throws the shirts over her brothers and they regain their human form. (In some versions she does not finish the sixth shirt in time, and the youngest brother is left as a swan. Another version would have 5 of the brothers returned to normal, except for the youngest brother, whose left arm remains as a swan's wing)

Thank you for all the kind wishes! I had a fantastic day at the beach in avon with my beautiful wife. Next up a NY strip at Brennan's and a slice of cheesecake. A perfect ending for a perfect day! and maybe a happy ending afterwards.
